The Studio of Alexander Calder

Newcomer from Europe, as they say, It is true that over there iron and copper are instruments only of evil adding death to death and to degraded life I fled, a fortunate fugitive,

The day and the night opened before Wings—algae—mobile leaves.
I salute you forger of giant dragon-flies Mercury-diviner your well disclosed
A water heavy as tears.
But a merry-go-round of little scarlet moons fills me with joy
I think of a transparent circus
It is a leaf traversed by the sun.
One green day you saw a red bird Pursuing a yellow bird;
you know that we are bound to nature that we belong to the earth.
Hung from the studio's rafters, in the striped light a gong sensitive to the whims of the air is struck with extreme caution Its note is the footfall of a dove: what hour does it strike?

This is the hour of the child with the cherries.
Here the seconds have not the weight of the clock nor do they lie quiet in the grass for they cannot conceive of immobility they love the rustling of reeds and the cry of the tree-toad so expert at musical breathing and they play between your fingers, Calder, my friend.
